

Your Self Safari

— A GUIDE FOR WHAT COMES NEXT

You took two quiet minutes to check in with yourself. That matters more than the result.

Most people never pause to ask how their life actually feels. They are too busy living it. You just did the rare thing. You stopped, and you looked.

So before anything else, hold the result lightly. What the quiz gave you is a starting point, not a verdict. It is a single reading taken on a single morning. It cannot capture the whole of you, and it was never meant to. It only points. Where it points is where the real exploration begins.

Wherever you landed

The quiz reflects one of three rough signals back to you. None of them is a grade.

Something inside is asking for attention

This is not a failure. Discomfort is not the enemy here. It is information. The unease you feel is the part of you that still remembers what alive feels like, quietly refusing to settle for less. That refusal is a good sign, not a bad one. It means the compass still works.

A mixed landscape

You are in the most honest and most common place there is. Some parts of your life feel lit. Others quietly ask for attention. This is not a problem to fix in a weekend. It is a threshold, and thresholds are where real movement tends to start.

Genuine signs of alignment

The work is not finished. It has simply changed shape. Aligned lives are not lives without questions. They are lives where the questions become more interesting. What you have is worth protecting, and worth deepening.

Whatever it said, the next step is the same for everyone. Stop looking at the score. Start looking at the landscape.

The six dimensions

The quiz measured a feeling. These six are where that feeling comes from. Think of them less as a checklist and more as six windows. You do not need to fix all of them. You only need to notice which one is quietly asking for your attention right now.

Read each question slowly. Do not rush to answer. The useful ones are the questions that make you pause.

i Purpose

The quiet sense that your actions matter. It unfolds slowly, through curiosity and contribution, rarely as a single dramatic moment.

ASK YOURSELF

When did I last feel completely absorbed in something that also felt meaningful?

ii Energy

Some parts of life generate energy and others drain it. This is one of the clearest signals of alignment there is.

ASK YOURSELF

Which parts of my life leave me feeling more alive, and which consistently deplete me?

iii Relationships

Human connection shapes almost everything else. Some relationships expand us. Others create a quiet, constant tension.

ASK YOURSELF

With whom do I feel most like my truest self, and with whom do I perform a version of me?

iv

Growth

The feeling that you are still becoming. When growth stops, something inside goes restless, even in a comfortable life.

ASK YOURSELF

What have I genuinely become in the past year that I value?

v

Contribution

The sense that what you do matters beyond yourself. It appears through work, creativity, mentoring, or quiet acts that help others.

ASK YOURSELF

What would be genuinely lost if I stopped doing what I currently do?

vi

Inner Quiet

The ability to sit with yourself without constant distraction. It has become rare, yet it is often where deeper clarity appears.

ASK YOURSELF

What thought or feeling do I most consistently avoid by staying busy?

That last question is often the one that matters most. Notice if you wanted to skip it.

How to use these questions

Do not try to answer all six today. That is how good questions get wasted.

Take one. The one that pulled at you as you read, or the one you most wanted to avoid, which is often the same one. Carry it for a week. Not as a problem to solve, but as a question to live alongside. Let it sit quietly in the background while you go about your days. The answers that arrive this way are worth far more than the ones you force in a single sitting.

And when you notice resistance, when a question makes you uncomfortable or restless, pay close attention. The resistance is not a wall. It is a signpost. It tends to stand exactly where the honest answer is being kept.

— A CLARIFICATION

What alignment actually is

The word gets misused everywhere, so it is worth being clear.

Alignment does not mean a perfect life. It does not mean constant happiness, or a life with no difficulty. People living aligned lives still have hard days, hard seasons, and hard questions. The difference is not the absence of struggle. It is the presence of a quiet signal underneath the struggle that says, even now, this is roughly the right direction.

And you do not arrive at it once and then keep it. It is not a destination you reach. It is a practice of noticing, returning, and adjusting, over and over. The noticing is the whole thing. And you have already begun, simply by being here.

— WHERE THIS GOES NEXT

Keep exploring

Soul Safari is a slow, ongoing exploration of exactly these questions. Not answers handed down from a height, but reflections to sit with. New ones arrive as they come.

If the quiz stirred something, the short films are the natural next step. Watch one. Let it settle. Watch it again if it speaks to you. The good ones tend to open a little more each time.

*You came looking for where you stand.
What you found is that you are the kind of person who stops to look.*

SOULSAFARI